

"The First Class Adventures Of Emerald and Jade" is a short motion picture for children that can also be enjoyed by their parents.

Emerald and Jade are two sisters, teen and tween respectively. Their fantastic escapades are motivated by the vast philatelic collection of their grandfather, Doctor Eben Douglass.

The modern story takes place in suburban America and in a fictional Asian country about fifteen years ago. A flashback recounts Doctor Douglass' uniquely heroic World War II service in the China-Burma-India Theatre.

Even the girls' grandma, Esmee, joins in the adventure.

The screenplay refers to about twenty postage stamps, of both domestic and international issue. Only four of them are real, and one of those is called "The Ledo Road Commemorative." In actuality, it is "The Burma Road Commemorative."

Hopefully, this story inaugurates an "Emerald and Jade" franchise. The postage stamp device permits the sisters to travel nearly anywhere, anytime, meet anyone or find anything.

The use of invented postage stamps allows them to be proprietary to the franchise and provides merchandising opportunities.

Get ready to join Emerald and Jade on their sometimes perilous, frequently fun, and occasionally educational voyages of the imagination.

Thank you and enjoy.
